Comments

Some American spellings are still on the list. For example, 'Urbanization' is predominantly used in the US but not in British or Australian English.

Unfortunately, after conducting research and running multiple tests, I found that GPT is not sensitive to different varieties of the English language and tends to default to American English most of the time, even when British or Australian English is specified.

Additionally, perhaps because of the limitations of the database that GPT uses, it tends to generate spoken English when I specify Australian English.

Specifying English variants would affect the quality of the generated topics. Therefore, to ensure the topic quality, using default English is a better choice.
